Summary/weekly reflection for Week #:

This week, we completed several important tasks, including our final team and supervisor meeting to align on deliverables. The poster design was finalized, and I worked extensively on frontend improvements, ensuring responsive design and enhancing user interactions. Additionally, I continued refining the backend to ensure it fully supports the updated frontend features.

One of the key lessons this week was the importance of balancing both frontend and backend development to maintain a seamless user experience. Effective team collaboration also played a crucial role in meeting deadlines. I further explored literature on UI/UX design and project management, which guided our approach to handling tasks efficiently.

However, challenges arose in aligning frontend changes with backend functionality, which required additional debugging. Managing time across multiple team members became difficult as we approached the final stages of this semester's work. Looking ahead, this project will continue into the next semester, where we will expand our efforts to develop both a web app and a phone app. This transition will require further planning and coordination to ensure that both platforms offer a cohesive and integrated user experience.

Despite these challenges, we remain on track and are prepared to continue building on this foundation next semester.
